At any given time a child may exhibit behaviors characteristic of more than one stage. This usually occurs during the period between toddlerhood (18-24 months) and early childhood (7 years). During this time, children's cognitive, physical, social, and emotional development is rapid and significant. Teachers in early childhood programs need to be aware of these developmental milestones to better support the children's learning and growth.

recommended by early childhood experts and researchers can be beneficial in reducing the risks of a child being learning disabled at development in a particular group of people is a very complex issue especially, given the globalization of today's world.

Prentice Hall Inc. International Journal of Early Childhood Special Education